Short Guide to the Snowdonia National Forest Park

The Snowdonia National Forest Park, established in 1937, consists of two large forests, Gwydyr and Beddgelert, on either side of Snowdon in North Wales. Gwydyr Forest, which is centred on the charming village of Betws y Coed,—the "Chapel in the Woods"—lies in the valley of the River Conway and its tributary streams—the Machno, the Lledr, and the Llugwy. Its woods stand on steep slopes rising from torrents and waterfalls to high plateaux which give the visitor grand views over the great peaks of Snowdonia a few miles to the west. Beddgelert Forest faces Snowdon from the slopes of the Nantlle Hills, and includes outlying woods in Nant Gwynant and the Pass of Aberglaslyn. Both Forests are mainly in Caernarvonshire, and have formed, since 1951, part of the Snowdonia National Park. Their total extent is 24,000 acres, equivalent to 37 square miles.

When the Forestry Commission began its work here in 1921, most of the present forest land was bare hillside of low grazing value, or else old woodland from which the trees had been cleared. Every year since then, thousands of young trees have been planted, to extend the tapestry of varied green over these hills, and the young woods now cover 15,000 acres. The better ground has been kept as small farms and holdings which diversify the view, while the highest land re-
